Spiritual Thought for the Week...

Mature Christian freedom, by contrast, is my total availability and obedience to the will of the all-wise God. We may find initially any disciplinary structure difficult, but with time we may so internalise it and identify with it that it becomes a new and comfortably improved self-image. But that would be too bad, because this accommodation would defeat the purpose of Christian discipline as a permanent instrument of openness to the work of the Spirit within us. It is not enough by far to have taken radical initial steps of conversion and to be a reasonably observant and faithful Christian. At the centre of our being we must remain poor and free and available to God rather than barricade ourselves through habit to the approaches of God's ever surprising grace.

From the Parish Priest's Desk....

This year there is a beautiful harmony as we start the Sundays in ordinary time. After contemplating the beautiful mysteries of the Trinity, Corpus Christi and the Sacred Heart, we are now plunged dramatically into what it means to be a disciple. If we believe these mysteries, what consequences will that have in our life?

The Liturgy is pointing out that if we want to live in the light – and not in darkness – if we want to be truly free, that freedom and light can only be found in Christ and we might add: where Christ IS. In Mark 3:14-15, Jesus primarily appoints his apostles so that they might be with him. Any missionary activity, indeed any activity at all comes after being with Jesus. John 1, his first followers want to know where he lives and they spend the day with him.

In the gospel today, this is taken to its logical conclusion, to be with Jesus means following him wherever he might go. The man in the gospel we know from Matthew's parallel text was a scribe which is interesting. A scribe was resident in a particular place with students gathered around him, so this scribe shows incredible generosity of spirit being willing to sacrifice his stability, his life's work to follow Jesus. Through grace he has come to realise that his studies of the law are now being fulfilled and brought into concrete action by the man in front of him. The written law is now brought into existence by the living incarnate law present in Jesus Christ.

Jesus then points out to him that the true nature of God is realised in the fact that the Son of Man has no place that he can call his own. Being the creator as well as the redeemer, this follows. The proof of Jesus' divinity lies in this simple fact that he has to move through his creation as a wayfarer. This is important for his disciples as following Jesus is going to necessitate a journey into the desert, a separation or better a detachment from not only things but also people and even important human duties and conventions – this is clear in Jesus' admonitions: leave the dead, leave ones family.

Once we acknowledge Jesus as God, there are only remain two logical solutions: to give up everything and to follow him or to kill him. This scribe follows, other scribes plot his death. This is why the world hates him because he puts this stark choice before everyone: either repent.....or..."It is not enough by far to have taken radical initial steps of conversion and to be a reasonably observant and faithful Christian. At the centre of our being we must remain poor and free and available to God rather than barricade ourselves through habit to the approaches of God's ever surprising grace" See Spiritual Thought for the Week

This radical conversion and following of Jesus is not attained immediately but come through the interior spiritual journey. St Teresa of Avila compares it to journeying through the mansions of the soul to the Interior Castle where uncreated light dwells. This journey is so exciting and beautiful that it makes the exterior world quite dull in comparison. Jesus does not ask that we are morally perfect, or brilliant students, or event that we are confident and know the way; he asks rather for complete openness and courage to continue come what may. He also promises that following him at least guarantees one very important thing: we will not be alone.

Our world of health and safety, of increasing protective laws, or a more sedentary life, I believe has dulled a spirit of adventure that we need in life. Danger, risk – although managed risk – is going to be a part of our life if we are going to accomplish anything. To follow Jesus then we also need to be adventurous, to be excited about the journey and to be prepared to sacrifice anything in order to continue. The Hobbit is a good example of how a staid, comfortable hobbit ends up setting out on a journey that he did not really want – except deep down - but this journey changes his life.

So let us be careful of building around ourselves structures that provide us with a nice comfort zone but which in the end hinder us. Even our very faith if we are not careful can end up being a pleasant comfort zone but one which does not call us to deep internal conversion and mission. We need the virtues especially of detachment, courage and perseverance. Let us "Put out into the deep" and enjoy the light and freedom that comes from being where Christ is. Also in this strange paradox when we have become detached from everything, we end up in fact possessing everything but now in the right way. We have nowhere to lay our head but the whole world is our garden!

God bless, Fr. Dominic Fiat!
